Thus, for example, in a predetermined geographic area with more than one center area (i.e., a “polygon”), there are usually two or more base stations (BSs) in each center area, with each BS being the closest to each of the client devices. The selected base station(s) establish connections with respective client devices, while the other base stations monitor and provide surveillance of the user equipment, for example, by performing mobility management functions such as cell reselection and cell handoff. Traditionally, the base stations are connected to the cell site/base station controller (BSC) which, in turn, is connected to the base station management system (BSMS) that is responsible for various operating functions of the network. The base station may be connected to the BSMS by a local landline or by a cellular radio interface. In either case, the functions performed at the BSMS and the functions performed at the BSC are well known to those in the art, and thus are not described in further detail herein. To keep mobile users connected to the network, the wireless network typically employs some form of handoff, for example, hard handoff. Referring now to FIG. 2, an exemplary network 20 for providing a voice service is illustrated in simplified block diagram form and is substantially identical to the network illustrated in FIG. 1. As illustrated,

President Donald Trump is facing a backlash from businesses and educators after he tweeted a video Monday that threatened to cut off funding for the World Health Organization (WHO). Key points: Trump refers to WHO's handling of the coronavirus as "misguided" and "ineffective" Trump refers to WHO's handling of the coronavirus as "misguided" and "ineffective" The WHO is not to blame for the disease's rapid spread, according to its director-general The WHO is not to blame for the disease's rapid spread, according to its director-general The WHO has received $US4.6 billion ($5.7 billion) from the US in the past six years Mr Trump referred to the WHO as "misguided" and "ineffective" in another tweet, saying the agency is "looking at the terrible testing being done in China, & how badly they are being represented in the FAKE NEWS media." The video showed a collage of Chinese economic figures and a large yellow checkmark with the words "What's Wrong." The WHO and Mr Trump have been facing increasing pressure over the US-China trade war, while the organisation has also been widely criticised for its handling of the COVID-19 coronavirus. "The WHO has about 60,000 people, of which only about a third are doctors," Mr Trump tweeted. "We have far more people." "The United States, by comparison, has over 15,000 active medical doctors," he added. Critics have accused the US President of continuing to distract attention from his administration's handling of the global pandemic. But the WHO pointed out the organisation did not "conduct, design, or manage" the research behind the data, and that its
