For example: I have a table table1 with a field: //table1.c# public string aaa; I add some records to this table and ODP.net generate script: //table1_script.sql ... create table "table1" ("aaa" varchar2(255 char) not null); ... I want to get list of all generated scripts for my tables. So I can compare them. Is it possible? A: You can generate the script yourself. It's also possible to use a generated script for insert/update/delete. But it's not possible to read that script without getting into Dynamic SQL (VBScript, pSQL,...). Q: Beaupréau, there is a short story called... Lamb roasts and Pheasants It was featured in a paperback SF book I remember. A man goes into a contest where there is a pool with x plastic pools for the entrants. He gets into one of them, and it contains a lamb dressed up for roasting (in fact a lamb is visible on the cover) and several entrants are roasting pheasants in the fire or walking about. The other pools are a pool of jellified pudding and cheese with a kind of pasta. Anyone know the name? A: The story is "Superior Auditoriment" by Alan E. Nourse (1952). I found it on the British Pulp Fiction site. We just deployed an updated version of the chat server that supports an extension that lets you enable the /donate command in the chat server. It's a simple extension that uses the Chatwork library, which provides a nice console widget that lets you accept donations from your users. The new version of the chat server included in v0.3.3 is available on npm, so you can clone it and include the extension in your chat system. You can also find instructions on how to update your chat server with v0.3.3 here. It's still early in the 3e33713323
