Photoshop Elements is free software, and users can easily learn Photoshop by working with the programs. I present a very quick tutorial in the next section, but be aware that Elements won't do professional-level Photoshop manipulation, only very basic tasks. The `Help` function in Photoshop provides a myriad of tutorials for anything from performing simple tasks to retouching a picture. You can buy packages of lessons, as well, in which there are hundreds of tutorials covering all the major features of the software. One of my favorites is Missing Manual's `Create a Web Page with Photoshop Elements,` which also covers website creation with other programs. Making it easy: Elements tutorials You can use Photoshop Elements or Photoshop CS2, CS3, or CS4 to edit, retouch, and otherwise manipulate images in a hurry. In this book, I point out the features I use most often to accomplish specific tasks and the steps I take to manipulate an image. Elements tutorials cover the following topics: Repainting: Photoshop Elements has a Repaint feature that lets you easily modify an area of a layer without having to completely replace the contents of the layer. Repainting just that area is a quick, handy way to fix a problem with your artwork or create a new effect. Rasterizing: The Photoshop Rasterize feature lets you rasterize — or change the display type of — an image so that it becomes a very low-resolution version of itself. When you save an image as a rasterized file, you're not actually changing the quality of the image; rather, you're just saving it as a different format. This can be

Q: How to make a CommonJS module work in IE? I have a CommonJS module written in Node.js ( ) in the `Module.exports = function() { }` I'm exporting a single object called `Names`. How do I make this module work in IE? A: Try adding a `module-name.js` file that has your commonJS module.

var commonJsModule =
require('./module-name');
module.exports = {
  commonJsModule.exportedName:
  commonJsModule.exportedName };

The IE module loader won't load it as a CommonJS module, however it will load it as a plain old module so you could replace module-name with your "real" module-name.js file and see if that makes it work.

Polyamines inhibit the formation of inositol phosphates in neuroblastoma cells by a mechanism independent of changes in phosphoinositide metabolism.

The effects of polyamines on phosphoinositide (PI) metabolism were examined in NB-2a neuroblastoma cells. When the cells were incubated with [3H]inositol, the polyamines, spermidine and putrescine, inhibited the formation of [3H]inositol-1,4,5-trisphosphate

[InsP3] and [3H]inositol-1,3,4-trisphosphate [InsP4] dose-dependently, although other polyamines such as spermine, spermidine and cadaverine were ineffective. The polyamine analogs N1-acetylspermine and N8-acetylspermidine were nearly as effective as spermidine and spermine, respectively. Both endogenous and [3H]inositol-labeled polyamines inhibited the production of [3H]inositol-1,4-bisphosphate [InsP2] without affecting the amounts of [3H]inositol phosphates, [3H]inositol-phosphates and [3H]inositol. These results suggest that polyamines selectively inhibit phospholipase C activity in the cells, without a decrease in the activity of phosphatidylinositol kinases in the cells. This inhibitory action

Q: Faster way to access the HBase data on a cluster? Let's say we have a simple MR job to read data from the table MyTable in HBase and update it in Spark. Is there a faster way to do this, without reading the whole data into the memory? `hbase.scan('MyTable').foreachRDD(function(data){ })`

A: `hbase.scan()` takes the object that contains the rowkey (ColumnFamily, Table,...) and the column (Map) and returns a scanner object. This object needs to get the data from the cluster. So the more data there is, the slower it is. You can do streaming reads on HBase. For example, if you have this query: `SELECT * FROM MyTable WHERE row_key = 'foo'` You would load the table in an ephemeral table (an empty table like your 'MyTable'). Then you can use any Spark SQL API on this table. For example you could do the following: `MyTable.scan().select("row_key", "column_values").where(")`
