What's New in the Simple Browser?

In the business world, it is a traditional practice for companies to manage their company's enterprise resource planning (ERP) applications by selecting and using one or more of the available open-source software. The advantages of doing so have long been recognized by some of the most prominent companies in the world. Now, besides the many benefits which open source ERP systems offer, some enterprises are now looking to take advantage of the many options available for developing custom applications as a means of further extending the functionality of their ERP systems. Open-source systems are now being used by many enterprises to provide applications that are unique to their business needs, while many enterprises are now also looking to extend the functionality of their ERP systems by developing custom solutions to address specific problems or to enhance their processes. In the Business Software market, some of the most important ERP systems include, SAP, Oracle, PeopleSoft, EPIC, and other software solutions such as ERP, CRM, SCM, and PM. This unique combination of ERP and custom applications provides enterprises with a much needed advantage. When it comes to selecting and managing ERP systems, enterprises are often more concerned with the ability to provide a platform on which to build custom applications, or to provide a platform that will enable their business to process a specific area of business information, rather than the ability to provide an ERP solution that meets all of their specific requirements. It is estimated that the market for business solutions is expected to grow at a CAGR of 30% during the period 2006-2016. Many of the companies that provide ERP solutions market their ERP solutions as providing a "common business platform," as enabling their customers to process a common set of business information, or as being able to provide the ability to address a specific business requirement. What this means, in effect, is that the companies are providing the ability to build custom solutions which address the business requirements of an enterprise, rather than providing an ERP system that can be used to address specific business requirements. ErpFreak is a software company that focuses on enabling enterprises to build custom solutions that can address their specific business requirements. The ERP system enables business users to build custom business solutions through its flexible and customizable tools. These custom business solutions include such capabilities as creating invoices, purchasing, product lifecycle management, inventory management, and stock and order management. The ERP system offers different functionalities, such as custom fields, reports, and customization tools, which can be used to customize the entire system and make it meet the requirements of specific business processes. These customized functionalities enable business users to address the specific business requirements of an enterprise. The ERP system is able to manage many different business processes, including, customer relationship management, supply chain management, order processing, purchasing, logistics, marketing, and finance.
