uVision Project Management and Run-Time Environment... and can be used to create debug and release builds or adapt for different hardware platforms. This allows developers to release new versions of the product that support the hardware platform. As a rule, project management systems such as Subversion or Git are used to manage the project in such cases. A version control system is used to manage the configuration of different versions. Typically, Visual SourceSafe is used for this purpose. A development environment is used to develop a software product for a specific hardware platform.
