Historic Walk: Chinatown Today's walk was a great introduction to old San Francisco. Nearly 250 years old, Chinatown is full of history. One of the oldest neighborhoods in America, and one of the only neighborhoods in San Francisco to be declared a historic district, it's important to learn about the area and its rich history. Next we'll head to the famous San Francisco cable cars, and enjoy a tour of the Transamerica Pyramid. Take a Historic San Francisco Walk Posted on August 5, 2017 Historic San Francisco Walk – Chinatown Today we'll take a walk in the heart of one of San Francisco's oldest neighborhoods, Chinatown. From the many popular tourist areas we can see in the distance, it's easy to forget about the tough beginnings of this great American city. For 250 years or so, San Francisco was a Spanish colony, and then a territory of Mexico. In the mid 19th Century, San Franciscans rebelled against Mexican rule, and this uprising would later be known as the Mexican American War. Many of the original structures from this time still stand, and today are mixed in with the modern buildings of this bustling city. A few of the landmarks that can be seen on the walk include the Bank of Italy, where we'll start our walk, as well as the notorious Chinese Opera House, which is no longer standing, but we'll have a great tour of the building on our next walk. From the Bank of Italy we'll cross the street to the Washington Square. Here we'll learn about what life was like for Chinese immigrants in America. It was a bitter time for them in America, as laws were in place to keep Chinese men from receiving many jobs. In order to receive a job, they were forced to leave China, which meant leaving their families behind. There are many walking paths along Washington Square, but today we'll take the Mission Street cable car to the Market Street cable car. This will allow us to walk along the market street, and take in the many lively shops and restaurants along
