Download.The present invention relates to an electronic apparatus with an interface device for executing an input operation with respect to a touch panel, and to a control method of the same. Input devices of an electronic apparatus are generally classified into input devices such as a keyboard and a mouse and touch panel devices using a touch panel. A control software for controlling the electronic apparatus is provided as a user interface between the electronic apparatus and the input devices. An input device is configured to communicate with the control software through an interface. The input device obtains an operation input of a user from the control software by using a sensor, and communicates with a personal computer (PC) connected to the input device through an interface. The control software communicates with the input device to receive the operation input of the user, and the input device communicates with the control software. A PC may have a mouse connectable to its peripheral device and a keyboard. The input device, such as a mouse and a keyboard, is connected to the PC through an interface such as a universal serial bus (USB). When both the mouse and the keyboard are connected to the PC, it is required to set a way to determine which one of the mouse and the keyboard is connected to the PC through the USB interface to establish a corresponding relationship between the mouse and the keyboard. However, when the mouse and the keyboard are both connected to the PC, the setting of the relationship between the mouse and Atrial fibrillation (AF) has a high prevalence in patients with acute coronary syndromes (ACS) and is associated with a worse prognosis. The risk of thromboembolic events in patients with ACS increases 1.5-fold in the presence of AF and 2.7-fold in patients with the permanent form of the arrhythmia. The pathophysiological link between AF and thromboembolism can be realized through prothrombotic, inflammatory and remodeling changes in the left atrium or the blood. Genetic, viral, and immunological causes of AF and the thromboembolic events are presented in the article. The necessity of anticoagulation in the presence of AF in patients with ACS is demonstrated. The future directions of studies on the issue are outlined.
