*  _Filters_. _Filters_ are effects that alter images in various ways. For example, you can apply a filter to an image that adds blur or sharpening. Some effects are created by professionals and put on a free market. Others are developed in-house by professional companies. In either case, many designers use filters, and Photoshop is a fast and easy way to apply these filters to their work. *  _Smart Filters_. Photoshop comes with tons of filters, but you can also create your own. When you make a filter, you apply it to an image, making that filter the new "filter," and you can change how the filter interacts with the layer. For example, you can change the amount of sharpening, blur, and so on that a filter applies to the image. You can use Photoshop as a tool to create creative filters as well. Creative filters are a blast to play with and are an easy way to vary the look and feel of a design without having to edit it directly. You can create your own creative filters to include in a workflow, use them as part of a layout, or share them with a like-minded design community.

You can also edit your images in post-processing if you desire. High Dynamic Range (HDR) The default settings are good if you are using a new camera with a limited dynamic range. Q: Javascript pong game with drawAngle After a weeks trying, I finally can run a pong game on html 5 canvas (for the sake of simplicity, I use just one ball for now). But now I would like to add a drawAngle function. I tried this one: var ball = { x: 100, y: canvas.height / 2, drawAngle: function() { var degrees = ball.y - 0.75 * canvas.height; balls[0].drawAngle = degrees; balls[1].drawAngle = degrees; } }; Also, I tried to get the angle before drawing the ball, instead of getting the angle after drawing it. var ball = { x: 100, y: canvas.height / 2, drawAngle: function() { balls[0].drawAngle = getAngle(ball.x - 4, ball.y, ball.x + 4, ball.y); balls[1].drawAngle = getAngle(ball.x - 3, ball.y, ball.x + 3, ball.y); } }; But both methods don't work: the angle is not updated, and the ball just doesn't move. I tried also these methods: ball.x += cos(angles[0] * Math.PI / 180); ball.y += cos(angles[1] * Math.PI / 180); But without success. Can someone help me please? Update: it doesn't seem to be a problem of delay, because if I comment out the ball.drawAngle = function(), the ball is moving. Update 2: I tested this code (with the fixed values of angles and ball): var ball = { x: 100, y: canvas.height / 2, drawAngle: function() { // balls[0].drawAngle = getAngle(ball.x -

What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.3.1)?

In a time when South Koreans in the diaspora were more visible due to the country's growing economy, artist Lee Seung Hee immersed herself in the New York-based community while building a portrait of a Korean American woman. In "Rachel," unveiled Thursday at the Mary Boone Gallery in New York City, Seung Hee created a portrait in oil paints of a woman with Korean features, but donning a chic headscarf and sitting on a white sofa, acting as a casual observer. "The portraits deal with identity," Seung Hee, who was born in Korea and grew up in the U.S., said in a phone interview. "I'm interested in how people read into identities or presume identities about people with different body types, [different] eye colors, facial features. But I think that when there is an attempt to create cultural identities, it's not something that necessarily needs to be one way. It could be a collaboration." Seung Hee was fascinated by the different cultures of Korea, Taiwan and the U.S. while growing up, and she wanted to portray a woman who was Korean, but whose appearance was westernized. "I started to do my research and looked at Korean American artists who had made paintings about identity in a Korean context," she said. "I really liked artists like Jim Choi, who was born in America and grew up in Korea. He made paintings of Korean women that had a different approach to their identity, and in ways that were interesting and playful." She came to New York in 2009 with a small portion of money to make her way, but it wasn't until 2010 when she decided to go to art school. Seung Hee entered the School of Visual Arts program and was guided by professors after receiving her master's degree in 2014. The model, Rachel Smith, was chosen not because of her ethnicity, but rather her life. "Rachel's part of the world was told to me in a way that was open. I thought she was a good subject because she was the kind of person I was looking to paint," said Seung Hee. Seung Hee wanted to merge the cultures of the U.S. and Korea, and believed "Rachel's eyes and face are expressions of her identity. Her eyes are 'Hong
