I'll join in on the penetration testing of the internet by using my portable laptop.. i have some legit questions about learning penetration testing,. Open source tools that enable an insider to stay out of reach of Â .Q: How to use I-Pad retina display image into iOS app? It seems that retina images are working well on I-Phone 4, but when I open it in I-Pad the images get too big. Is there a way to have retina images work in I-Pad Retina as well? A: It looks like they're both using the same image, in which case you could use a second image at double size. This should avoid the need to scale it up massively when displayed on an iPad (plus it won't waste any extra space). For example, I created two images at 640x960 using Photoshop, one set to 200% = 1.25x res and the other set to 300% = 1.5x res. I then added the images to the same group (in order - image containing 200%, followed by image containing 300%)

under Photoshop. These are the two images on the right. When opened in iPhoto (on an iPhone 4) I see that each image is rendered as though it's at 1.25x and 1.5x at the same time. A: In Xcode: Go to your Images.xcassets folder and drag the new image file you created and drop it in the group. Then, you just need to add your image to the Media Attachments and check the Retina checkbox. UPDATE: I just noticed that they just added this "Retina" checkbox on the new Xcode in El Capitan. It's way less hassle than what I described, and definitely worth checking out! A: There is no easy way and doing it properly can be a bit of a pain - but here's a simple and painless method. Create 2x versions of your image. For example a 1000x1000 image could be both 1000x1000 and then 2000x2000. (I'm not sure if IOS will like you doing 2000x2000 images though!) Create a folder called imgs Move the 2x images into the imgs folder.
