Access the Aim Trainer Pro on your PC, and start shooting. Settings for Aim Trainer Pro game game: Left Mouse Button for Aiming / Tracking Right Mouse Button for "Fire" Click on the "Fire" Button to shoot Once your done, click on the "Next" Button to continue. If you want to change the sensitivity use the "Sensitivity" Control or the "Sensitivity" Button and set the value to your liking. If you want to change the sensitivity every time you play the game, set the Custom Sens to your liking, then open the game, and you will be able to re-set the sensitivity every time you play the game. Note: For game play in 1.0.0, you have to increase the sensitivity value until you feel the mouse feels natural, but it's not to make a perfect aim, it will be natural with to the mouse while aim. You can also make your own custom sensitivity and we have a lot of custom presets to choose from, (subject to free updates). Train your aim with Aim Trainer Pro's Classic Aim Mode. Click the Start Game Button to begin a game to shoot the targets (The game will start on highest difficulty) The left mouse button will aim the mouse and the right mouse button will shoot. Simply move the mouse until the crosshair is over your target or the mouse will not move, you can try the tracing mode as well. Now you can start repeating and practice! Be sure to practice and not expect to have a perfect aim right away. With regular training, your aim will get better over time. Set custom sensitivity If you'd like to use a different sensitivity than the default sensitivity of 40 we have a lot of custom presets which you can use. Click the button "Custom" and you can choose which sensitivity you would like to use. Now close the game and open the game again. These are the main settings of the Aim Trainer Pro: Sensitivity - You can set Custom Sens using the menu. Tracing - You can set tracing using the menu. Target color - The color of your target / mouse cursor Weapon type - What kind of weapon you want to use (Can be changed in the game) Crosshairs size - the size of the crosshairs Include target outlines - You can turn on or off the target outlines These are

“If you see a police car, don’t get mad. Don’t think it’s your fault. Think it’s the fault of the person who put the car there.” - Will Smith I discovered Smith when I was eleven or twelve years old. We watched a few of the movies he appeared in, I remember an urban feel to them. Besides my hometown that was all I was exposed to. But as I got a little older, I discovered that people in Compton (Smith’s neighborhood) were known gangsters, sports heroes, body guards etc. His introduction to the community has to be one of a kind. Growing up in his area, although he wasn’t the first to be neighborhood hero, he was easily the most popular. The trailblazer for the hood. Throughout history, a “cool” white boy had to have a nice car. An automobile spoke volumes about coolness and made your neighborhood look more respectable. To have one, to have anything really, meant you were affluent. Will Smith was the epitome of cool. And to be honest his mom was cool as well. Smith appeared in a string of films during the 90’s. Big, ain’t nothin’ wrong with that. Some of you may know what a recent comes (a close up we don’t have in rap music videos anymore) is commonly called. I thought it was funny to have a silly mini-series based around it’s main character. Most people like to look back on the music they grew up with, what’s most notable about listening to “Fresh Willy Music” back in the day, was the sounds. It was less electronic and more in your face. But there’s one thing I didn’t fully appreciate at the time, and that is how to be Will Smith in a rap song. I had admired the way he danced, smiled, talked. I even called him my rap idol. When it came time to make a film based off of the Fresh Willy music, you might have guessed that he would be a central character. You had your intro sequence, a face off and then a glimpse of his killer look in a pirated movie. But one of the most memorable is The Undercover Brother. The Undercover Brother was a big hit, it’s a very mean and strong sort of song
