The contractile activity of muscles is dependent on the interaction of actin and myosin molecules of muscle cells. This interaction is mediated by the myosin's presence at actin's point of attachment to the cell membrane. Our recent studies have shown that myosin is associated with the cells' plasma membrane in a form sensitive to extraction by 1M NaCl; hence we are calling this protein membrane-associated myosin. Our hypothesis is that membrane- associated myosin functions as a mechanism for muscle cells to contract. The question arises as to how cells which have no sarcolemma (i.e. those capable of contraction but lacking myosin) contract. We are currently trying to answer this question and have isolated two cell lines which do not have sarcolemma and which appear to have an actin-based force of contraction. We will use electron microscopy to investigate these cells.Q: Cannot download a signed APK from Google Play I just signed my first and only app. I've tried on 2 phones using 2 different account on Google Play Console. Both phones are offline and freshly loaded on Google Play Console. Both phones are authenticated. Both phones have a new Android ID (error reporting) Both phones are on the same WiFi network and the app is in the "Beta testing" section. I've read multiple questions/answers regarding this, but nothing seems to work for me. My logcat is showing nothing and no error window is popup on my phone. My versionCode is reset to 1, since I'm the first apk and I've changed the package name. I've declared the "Uploading signed APKs to Google Play" in the Manifest (actually I've tried both), and I know it's correctly signed and uploaded to Google Play thanks to my other signed Android apps. I'm using Xamarin. I've tried on both ways: Right click on
