A only available version is R2R V2.2 32bit.The present invention relates to a radiation hybridization method for the detection and differentiation of a target polynucleotide. The method is generally capable of detecting a single stranded target polynucleotide as short as 15 base pairs in length. The detection and differentiation of a target polynucleotide is a difficult task which frequently requires elaborate laboratory procedures. Often, many PCR reactions are required to detect a given target polynucleotide which has been separated by gel electrophoresis from other polynucleotides. In the detection of a target polynucleotide, it is often difficult to distinguish whether a given target is single stranded or double stranded. Therefore, it is desirable that a single reaction be capable of detecting both single stranded and double stranded target polynucleotides. The foregoing problems have been somewhat overcome by the use of reagents and procedures similar to those described in PCT Application WO 90/03446. However, even this technique requires the use of a total of 3 primers, one of which serves as a primer in each of

It was in this context that the Johnstones began working with the future Prime Minister John Howard and, by extension, Senator Con Hassit of Australia, to galvanise global concern about the insidious risks of the North Korean nuclear threat. They travelled to the Korean peninsula, visited markets and factories, and met with diplomats, academics, artists, politicians, business leaders, and journalists. In July 2007, Johnstone accompanied the ABC's Robin Brant and Jason Knauf on an international ABC Radio National Ploughing Into The Night 'fusion' journalism project to South Korea, but things seemed different this time. The questioning was much more aggressive, and the ABC team attempted to treat Johnstone as a guest, not a journalist. By contrast, the interviews in April 2010 seemed more relaxed, and Johnstone provided an open, compelling, and sometimes controversial portrait of himself. The same week that I did the Medibank interview, I also tracked down Peter Kwan, a former federal Liberal frontbencher who is the director of the Asian College of Australian Studies at the University of Melbourne. Kwan had no direct experience of the Hwang Ho episode, but knew Johnstone quite well. "I was shocked by the interview," said Kwan. "I was shocked that he would have referred to Hwang Ho as a pariah. That whole interview gave the impression that he was a lunatic. He had become a media personality and was trying
