present invention generally relates to the art of electrical connectors and, particularly, to a high density connector having a loading device and a latching device for making physical and electrical connection with the connector. High density interconnect devices such as those described in U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,738,515 and 5,067,835 are known. These connectors include a plurality of contacts for making electrical connection with corresponding contacts on a complementary mating connector. One of the electrical contacts is typically larger than the other contacts. It has been found that high speed performance is dependent on the ability of the contact to maintain good electrical connection with the mating contact. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,738,515 and 5,067,835 both describe connectors with two parallel arms. During a mating operation the contacting arms are, for example, pulled to a closed position using a cam mechanism. Although the cam is in a location to maintain the arms in a closed position, the cam is, nevertheless, required and is not designed to make physical and electrical connection with the electrical contact. Accordingly, it is desirable to provide an electrical connector with a novel mounting and latch system. A specialized training service intended for arborists and tree care professionals.
