Andrew Harrison.Source: iStock/GiovanniTex The man presumed to be the anonymous Bitcoin developer known as "Bitcoin Core" has confirmed that he is, in fact, indeed Gavin Andresen. As such, the Bitcoin Core Developer "Bitcoin Core" has confirmed that he is, in fact, indeed Gavin Andresen.The man who goes by the handle of "Bitcoin Core" on bitcointalk.org has now signed his real name and has left his previous alias of "Gregory Maxwell". He has also removed his LinkedIn profile which linked him to Greg Maxwell who is in charge of development of the Bitcoin Core client for almost a decade and the new developer has filled up his personal portfolio with his development skills:Micro-payments were one of the main "killer apps" that Bitcoin was designed for. So if it is indeed the Satoshi Nakamoto himself who created the original Bitcoin protocol for micro-payments, it's only normal that he wants to know how to make that app work right. The developer is the author of Bitcoin XT, the Bitcoin Classic version of the project which was introduced as a stop-gap measure to give the Bitcoin community an alternative to increasing the block-size limit, in case the latter was deemed not to be possible.Bitcoin Core is one of the two major forks of Bitcoin that came after its launch. This client is used by other project such as Bitcoin XT, Bitcoin Classic and so on. According to the BitcoinXT.org website, it had been upgraded several times since it was released on December 18, 2012
