I know that the need for multiple identities can bring unnecessary stress and is not always intentional. So, this post is not intended to discourage this. For those who already engage in this practice, it is important to understand that it can be used for good and bad. So, I would like to help you create a system of multiple identities that is more intentional and positive. For those who have not tried it yet, I would like to share the reasons why and also the benefits. People often point out that stress often leads to health problems or is a cause of such problems. I would like to counter this by saying that stress is a healthy response to personal and social change. The type of stress we experience today is a response to the cognitive dissonance created by recent changes such as new technologies and political shifts, etc. Not only does this kind of stress encourage new learning but is often accompanied by a desire to change. So, what is stress? Since our earliest experience, we have had to cope with a changing environment. This can be the stimuli that we encounter in daily life (stressors), the emotional reactions to those stressors, and the decisions we make as a result of those reactions. Stress is a response to cognitive dissonance. The more the environment changes, the more cognitive dissonance occurs and the more stress the individual experiences. This stress is necessary for the individual to change or adapt and survive. When we create the new identity that is required to cope with a changing environment, it is much like playing a new instrument in an orchestra or trying a new sport. In either case, we have to learn new skills. The need to adapt allows us to begin to internalize this new identity and become skilled at it. We begin to reflect on new things, figure out how to do things differently, and how to make new choices. Whenever a new identity or skill is learned, we will need to think about this new identity and apply it to our other roles (I call these roles "alters"). When we do this, we experience "cognitive dissonance". We have to reconcile what we used to do with what we now do or think about. Now, let

New figures reveal that half-year lending to the sector, which amounted to £4.4bn in the first half of 2015, is the lowest level since 2009. The financial pressure on lenders to make more loans means that small and medium-sized businesses will not be able to grow their businesses and take on new staff unless they can access a loan. The new figures on SME lending in the first half of this year are published in the Bank of England's monthly MFR, and include SME lending data which can be broken down by UK region. Business rates are the latest issue to have a negative impact on SME business activity, with April's figures showing that the rise in rates announced by the chancellor, Philip Hammond, has led to a fall in business rates for the fourth consecutive month. In the April to June quarter, the Bank of England's measure of business rates changes has fallen to its lowest level since 2011, with only the second quarter of 2016 and the first quarter of 2017 recording fall in business rate changes. Since 2013, the average quarterly fall in changes to business rates has been 2.3%, falling to 1.8% in the March to June period. The October to December 2015 period has also recorded a change in business rates of 0.4%, suggesting that businesses should expect further drops in rates throughout 2016. The chairman of the Federation of Small Businesses, Mike Cherry, said the
