The Canadian government is facing two new court cases over its role in building the Kinder Morgan pipeline, a major project that would twin a 1,700-km pipeline from Alberta to the British Columbia coast. The new challenges come about a year after the federal government sided with the project's builder, Kinder Morgan Canada, in the court case that delayed construction of the Trans Mountain Pipeline last summer. It has already spent more than $130-million on the project, and it has not yet started building the $7.4-billion pipeline. Story continues below advertisement In June, the National Energy Board rejected a plan by Kinder Morgan Canada to build the project. The NEB said it was concerned about a number of factors, including the government's approval of the project and the potential for a spill. In both of the new cases, the NEB wants permission to reconsider its June decision to reject the project and to order Kinder Morgan Canada to fix problems with the design. The company has not said how it will respond. In 2017, the City of Burnaby, B.C., has filed a lawsuit alleging that the federal government, the Alberta government and Kinder Morgan Canada conspired to mislead it when the project was approved. The lawsuit, which could be worth more than $15-billion, accuses the federal and Alberta governments of misleading citizens about the risks and consequences of approving the pipeline. The case also names Kinder Morgan Canada as a defendant. The B.C. government filed a similar lawsuit, but that claim has yet to be heard in court. "We're very focused on that claim and we'll make no further comment," B.C. Attorney-General David Eby said in an interview. The lawsuit filed by the Burnaby municipality is against Kinder Morgan and the Alberta and federal governments, and is the first of its kind to hit the courts in Canada. Story continues below advertisement The NEB's approvals are usually appealable, but court cases are rare because of an important rule that prevents the NEB from making errors of law or fact. The NEB's decisions must be supported by evidence. "That's not what has happened in this case. They've made errors of both fact and law," said Peter Hogg, a Burnaby city lawyer. Some environmental groups have said the NEB's rejection of the project was a decision based on potential spills from the project, which means it was based on bff6bb2d33
