The College has its own Church of England chapel. The college was founded in January 1966 with the first intake beginning their studies in September 1966. In April 2013 the college rebranded and became known as Greenhill College. Greenhill College offers accommodation for 296 undergraduates and 68 postgraduates. The current Headmaster is David Clayden OBE (previously Headmaster of Durham College, University of East Anglia, Northumbria University and Goldsmiths College), who took over the position in November 2015. History Greenhill College was founded in 1966 as an affiliate of Sutton Theological College, later named the College of the Resurrection, under the guidance of the Rector, the Reverend Geoffrey Bossom, later the Bishop of Maidstone. The college was originally located in the then parish church of Christ the King, Bridge Street, Southwark, which would later become St Paul's & St Mary's College. In 1967, the College moved to 80 Watling Street, North Greenwich. The college occupied the sites of the old Archbishop of Canterbury's School and the Watling Street Assembly Rooms, just across the road from the University of Greenwich. For almost 40 years the college was run by a Committee headed by the Principal. The college acquired property in Elm Park, Sutton, in 1970. In November 2003 the college moved to its present site in Old Park Road, Sutton. In the same year a large sum of money was received from the British Churches Pension Fund (BCPF), the largest gift that it had ever received. With this money, the college renovated the main college buildings, added a new Administration building, refurnished and redecorated the main college rooms and created a University Centre with a Common Room, where the current Headmaster and Director of Studies live. This was part of a decade long expansion and improvement of the college grounds. In 2011, a new (dormitory) block was built in close proximity to the main college building. The college was acquired by the University of the Third Age (U3A), a multi-college federation in 2008. The U3A took over running of Greenhill College and renamed it Greenhill College and Community. In April 2013 the college rebranded and became known as Green d0c515b9f4

Flat flexible cable is a component used for terminating electronic components and assembly of electronic devices such as computers. Flat flexible cable generally has a flat, flexible cable body having a length with a central opening for mounting an electronic component. Typically, a plurality of spaced electrical contact elements such as pins, blade contacts, or springs are inserted into the opening at the ends of the cable body. In some instances, a metal shell may be insert molded or die cast around the ends of the cable body over the central opening to provide strain relief and electrical shielding and to protect the contact elements. Flat flexible cable with electrical contacts has been in existence for some time. However, due to the dissimilar characteristics of the components associated with flat flexible cable and other types of electrical connectors such as ribbon connectors, this type of flat flexible cable has not been widely used in the electronic and electrical industries. Typically, electronic components are generally packaged with a plurality of conductors. Each conductor has its own individual connector, such as a ribbon connector, which can be affixed to the electronic component. Generally, ribbon connectors have a lead/trace layer with a plurality of spaced-apart conductive traces that are attached to an insulating layer. The traces have alternating strips of exposed, conductive material and insulating material. The exposed conductive strips are arranged in a zig zag pattern to form a plurality of traces. Each trace has an opposing strip of conductive material to create a plurality of slots between the strips of conductive material. In use, the electronic component with the ribbon connector is connected to another device by mating the ribbon connectors of the electronic component and the other device. The conductive strips in the ribbon connector penetrate the insulator layer of the electronic component, forcing the insulating material to be in contact with the conductive material of the electronic component. A major problem with ribbon connectors is that their mechanical and electrical characteristics can be unpredictable. Because the conductive strips are formed in a
