“The goal of developing the best soccer game in the world means accurately recreating the motion and intelligence of real soccer matches,” said Daniel Santos, executive producer, EA Sports FIFA. “The key to this is combining player data from actual, high-intensity matches with an innovative artificial intelligence engine to deliver a new and unique experience. We can see the results in FIFA 22 with player animations, gameplay, ball physics and control that all respond accurately to the abilities and movements of actual soccer players.” “It’s what our fans have been asking us for,” said Oliver Bierhoff, vice president of FIFA. “We brought many of the improvements to the World Cup to the game – including the improved ball physics, improved feedback and more sprint speed – and we wanted to give more focus and accuracy to the FIFA World Cup presentation. Today, our first goal is to deliver the most accurate football experience on PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC.”
