This is a revolutionary step forward for football simulation, which has never been used before on this scale. FIFA 22 is the first ever football simulation to depict match intensity through player animations in a football match of real-life duration and intensity. For the first time, key midfield players will play their own specific part in the team's attacks. The ball will never stop moving even when the opponent does, the offensive players will constantly be in motion, and every player on the pitch will do all they can to influence the match and be a key factor. The motion capture technology collects millions of data points per second, used to animate every player, ball, referee and pitch surface in-game. Every player will be hyper-physically accurate, with real-life animations and realistic behaviours. They'll also react to the ball, the player they're guarding, and the player they're running at. Individual player traits are also being improved. Players are now more intelligent, with distinct personalities and playstyles. For example, one player may be hungry to score, while another might be more cautious and hold position, while another will be all about tackling and winning the ball back. FIFA 22 will also introduce the next generation of team AI, with a move towards intelligent formation selection and tactical decisions and player movement. AI will also think laterally, and go for the win more often.
