Working with the Layers Panel Danee Watkins 1 (1) Los Angeles, CA, USA Only Photoshop can load Photoshop Design and manipulate layers—this is a key part of Photoshop and we'll touch on how layers work in this chapter. We'll begin by looking at the Layers panel and how to manipulate it. We'll also take a look at paths and how to manipulate them. We'll finish with a short discussion on saving work in your folder and then we'll be on to the next chapter—creating images! The Layers panel's basic layout is illustrated in Figure 15-1. The panel's upper-left corner contains a thumbnail image of the currently active layer. The upper-right corner contains a small stack of thumbnail images that represents each layer in a state of partial transparency. You can use the hand tool, shown in Figure 15-2, to select a portion of an image and drag it into another location in the image. The hand tool uses a black box for selecting and a white box for dropping. Your cursor changes to an I-shaped icon when you drag the hand tool. Figure 15-1 Layers panel at the bottom of the screen. Figure 15-2 Hand tool. Note that you can click on any thumbnail image to open that image for editing at 100 percent magnification. It's easy to make mistakes or to accidentally load new images into the Layers panel. Figure 15-3 shows how the Layers panel resembles an onion. Each layer stack represents a layer in an image you are editing. By default, you can access five layers in the current image, including the Background layer, which represents the "root" or "parent" of the image. You access the Layers panel by pressing the F9 key. Other ways to access the Layers panel include: * Click on the Windows/Mac Logo in the upper-right corner. * Click on the Layer Menu on the far-left side of the workspace. * Click on the Layer Pal

An eco-friendly fertiliser that turns organic waste into beauty supplies has been patented at the University of Birmingham. Pellets of biodegradable plastic made from chicken and lamb bones, and pig hair, are covered in coatings including liquid and powdered plant nutrients that make the pellets water-resistant for one year. The fertiliser has the potential to help farmers, who often do not know what to do with their animal byproducts, and which are often sent to landfill. The biodegradable pellets can also act as a vehicle for delivering plant nutrients to crops, speeding up the growth cycle and increasing yields. Birmingham spin-out, Forest Tech, has already received a £500,000 grant from Innovate UK to develop the fertiliser. The coatings and pellets will be patented at the University of Birmingham. Eileen Sheffer, chief executive of Forest Tech, said: "Farmers, food manufacturers and the environment can all benefit from this new, innovative way of processing waste into useful products. "Forest Tech is committed to bringing alternatives to the way the livestock industry handles waste and using as many inputs and outputs as possible to reduce, reuse and recycle, thereby reducing the amount of waste that ends up in landfill." Although the coatings and pellets have been proven safe in laboratory studies, they have yet to be tested in the real world, she added. However, according to a paper published in the journal Plant Biotechnology, the efficiency of pellets containing up to 30% gibbon bone meal, 12% liquid fertilizer and 34% powdered fertilizer was higher than the coated pellets alone. The percentage of fertilizer in pellets was increased from 10% to 30% at the suggestion of farmers, she said. The biodegradable pellets could have a wide range of applications, from cosmetics and beauty products to nutritional supplements, alternative medical products, and even medicines. Many supermarkets already make use of the fine material found in pig hair, she added.
