The device is codenamed Orbis and will be released late next year. Sony Computer Entertainment will use the event to unveil a new corporate logo and the controller that will be used with the new console. The new controller will include a touch pad, unlike the traditional D-pad that has been used since the PlayStation 2. This year, Sony Computer Entertainment America will also reveal the games for the PlayStation 4, such as Killzone Shadowfall and Infamous Second Son. Sony Computer Entertainment president Andrew House, Sony Worldwide Studios president Shuhei Yoshida, and Sony Computer Entertainment America president Jack Tretton will be on stage at E3 2013 to unveil the new console. Sony Computer Entertainment's press release for the event also mentions that the executives and developers from various studios will be on stage to announce the games. The introduction of the Orbis console and its controller are the last major reveals for Sony Computer Entertainment's E3 2013 press conference.
