By ESPN Stats & Information As a matter of fact, they had the right person already in place. Jed York hired Mike Shanahan in 2010, and the former coordinator/quarterbacks coach oversaw a turnaround of the franchise that's resulted in three consecutive playoff appearances and a Super Bowl trip. Shanahan got a better look at his new face of the franchise during the mid-afternoon Wednesday news conference at Levi's Stadium, noting that he wanted to meet with players during the offseason program and summer workouts as well. "I think that's important," Shanahan said. "You're going to get a feel for how the team operates and you're going to start to get a feel for the guys that are around you, the guys that are working hard to be part of your team." General manager John Lynch said that the 49ers "absolutely" wanted to retain all their coaches, including their head coach, but "there's no question we were in the position where we needed to make changes in some areas." With that in mind, the 49ers' list of coaching candidates expanded considerably this offseason, with many of them seeing their names pop up on Twitter on a daily basis. "We weren't really afraid to make changes," Lynch said. "We weren't afraid to make improvements in areas that needed improvement or improvements in areas where guys were proven to be successful. So we weren't afraid to make changes and we weren't afraid to change." With that being the case, the decision was made to retain many of the 49ers' coaches, including offensive coordinator Chip Kelly, defensive coordinator Robert Saleh, quarterbacks coach Rich Scangarello, assistant head coach/run game coordinator Mike Nolan and tight ends coach Dave Shinskie. Other coaches expected to remain are defensive line coach Jeff Zgonina, wide receivers coach Parry Gennett d0c515b9f4
