, 1989 I wonder how many people remember details of this film. I think recently it's come up because it showed at many science fiction film festivals, and a movie I need to see is almost completely bizzarely interspersed with the Star Wars prequels. So I somehow forgot how it all goes together... John McClane is a cop in Indianapolis, who's partner is his brother. Nearby be where a serial killer is committing murders, they walk down a street and he's suddenly dangling from a beam above them. Turns out the killer is also just hanging, and he has a round ball in his mouth, which is a bomb. John begins to realize that this situation is incredibly dangerous, and so he tries to escape. Well, first he jumps in a cop car, in which the driver appears to have brain damage. John and the cops then speed off, and drive right into the International Space Station. The cop car descends steadily until the pilot makes a major error, crashing the car into the atmosphere. Meanwhile, John is now in his own space-pod, accompanied by the cop they were in before. John can ask questions only via a loudspeaker, and the cop has complained of feeling dizzy, so is leaning over John to answer. Then the criminal on board the space station comes down and threatens John. John is then taken to a space-pod headed for Earth. On Earth, a craft with laser beams has set up on the ground, and is slowly changing, similarly to the movie Red Dawn. The space pod lands hard, and John and the cop get out of it. They're now in the middle of an American militia meeting, and are welcomed by General Arnold, a shootist who's got a rifle, and a pet dog. The two people are taken to see the orbital sensors, which show the terrorists trying to take control of the space station. The militia decides to attack. Anybody remember this movie? Is it interspersed with a Star Wars movie anywhere? The Grexians Aug 2, 2001, 02:41 AM If you think I'm imaginative with a talent, you ain't seen nothing yet... In Planet Hotpot you will be conducting official corporate-sanctioned investigations into rival companies. You will be able to access the leadership of the corporation, weapon shops, and other key functions of the game, using a VR headset to interact with the environment. If you need more space for your investigations, you can go on a corporate spaceflight to any of the environments that the game is set in. In the two-player mode, one player is the detective, while the other is the more experienced bartender or steward. It is possible to complete the entire game in one sitting, with one player going from beginning to end while the other one plays as the bartender or steward. This way, if you make a mistake in game, it will only affect the current sequence and not the entire game. You can also play as the bartender or steward and wait for your partner to come back to you later, to continue playing together. However, you can only do this if both players have the same inventory, and thus, have the same characters. In Planet Hotpot, you play as an investigative P.I. who is hired to track down corporate espionage, during which you play as bartender or steward who has to wait until the other player returns. The game is split into two threads, with one being the main investigations and the other one being a mix of cut scenes, dialogues, and various animations with visual book-ends. You will be able to access the leadership of the corporation, weapon shops, and other key functions of the game, using a VR headset to interact with the environment. Why We Wrote the Game: Since we could write VR games as long as we wanted, in the past years we released three games in that vein. However, all three were single player, and none were structured like this. In this game, we took all the fun out of detective games, and instead made it a 2D bar drink game. If you enjoyed Superbrothers: Sword and Sworcery and Penumbra, then this game will be right up your alley. The game is made with access to a 3D engine, and will be released for Vive and Rift, as well as for PSVR, Linux, MacOS, and Windows. Content Warning: This game is about corporations trying to kill each other for economic gain. Expect lots of violence and death. These include assassination attempts, explosions, violence, and deaths.
