I want to store the values in a text file using the python script. A: You can parse the response and write it to the file using Python.

import requests
import json
r = requests.get("", verify=False) json_string = json.dumps(r.json()) f = open(filename, 'w') f.write(json_string)
f.close()

Thrombospondin is a natural potent inhibitor of the tissue-factor-dependent pathway of factor VIII coagulation. Thrombospondin (TSP) is a glycoprotein that was isolated in 1988 from the platelet membrane preparation. Since TSP is also present in other cells, it is a circulating factor that can be isolated, purified, and quantitated by using commercially available antibodies. The thrombin-induced platelet response to collagen or adenosine diphosphate was inhibited by TSP in vitro by using a sulfated polysaccharide, heparin, or thrombin receptor-activating peptide to enhance its affinity for the platelet surface. TSP also inhibited the response to thrombin after cross-linking the mAbs F8.12 or ER-MP22. TSP inhibited the coagulation of factor VIII in the prothrombin time in a concentration-dependent manner. Inhibition did not involve thrombin generation or subsequent coagulation of factor VIII through cleavage of B beta 159-163, which makes up the Ca²⁺-binding site on factor VIII, because factor VIII dissociated from factor VIII:C or IX:C was not affected by TSP. Most importantly, the mixture of TSP and factor VIII inhibited factor VIII coagulant activity independently of the presence of phospholipids or factor VIII procoagulant activity. These results demonstrate that TSP is a potent natural inhibitor of the tissue-factor-dependent pathway of factor VIII coagulation that does not require factor VIII participation. TSP might therefore participate in regulatory mechanisms during thrombosis, where it could interfere with circulating factor VIII.

Fatal disseminated Mycobacterium avium complex (MAC) infection is a severe disease affecting virtually all CD4-positive T-cells, which is characterized by disseminated, necrotizing granulomas, particularly in the lung and lung hilar lymph nodes (L
