The Republican-led House voted 46-30, following months of debates over how fast to phase in the increase and whose businesses and workers would benefit from it. By the end of the debate, some members of the GOP-controlled chamber were pleading with their colleagues to send the measure to the Senate for a vote. "This vote is the only vote," said Rep. Tom Flanagan, R-Laurel. Others said the measure lacked a path to implementation for some of the problems it was aimed to solve. Democrats, meanwhile, all but one were united in calling for a $15-an-hour minimum wage, which their Senate counterparts are also pushing. The House passed a bill that would raise the current $7.70-an-hour wage to $10 over the course of five years. The proposal would then be repealed and its benefits would be extended for an additional three years. Unlike the House bill, the Senate's version would phase the increase in over eight 648931e174
