According to EA Sports, “HyperMotion Technology allows you to experience the same highly-acclaimed FIFA gameplay that millions enjoy, but with enhanced responsiveness, greater power and more accurate ball speed. FIFA recognizes a player’s ball touches and behavior, so the game can react accordingly. “This is live gameplay, not animation, so you’ll feel every player’s movements and hear every whistle that’s called in the match. And unlike other sports games, there’s no delay between when you make a move and when the game reacts to it. The ball will react just as it does in real life.” The goal is for players to feel as if they are playing in real life, as a means to emulate the actual experience in the best possible way. FIFA 20 gave players the tools to accurately simulate the speed of the ball, so that they can reproduce that feel in all areas of the field. But they did not change the physics. “While we wanted to mimic the speed of real-life football, we also wanted to make sure that we could preserve the feel of the original game,” said Senior Producer Adam Tibbetts. “When you use motion capture and the performance capture data for the players, you’re not just playing on the motion of the players, but you’re playing on the movements of the athletes themselves, who have a much greater and more accurate range of motion than is seen in traditional animation.” “HyperMotion Technology extends and enhances that original work with the aid of more player-specific data to make the game feel as realistic as possible,” he added. Below are just a few of the noticeable improvements in “HyperMotion Technology”: The following screenshots illustrate where the real-life data benefits the player. The screenshot below shows the challenge of accurate tackling, which is a key component of defensive play. Players with eyes on the ball will often have to tackle their opponent instinctively, and that takes accuracy and timing. This screenshot highlights how the player will now naturally drop to the ground to tackle. Note that the AI players in the gap above and below the ball will now have to think about the tackle situation.

FIFA is a team sports game - your character has to join a team and compete against your opponents, all while employing a host of different techniques to score and win. All of this happens on an authentic football pitch. As a player, you'll need to master the core skills of the game, while also customising your player. Use the Customization screen to customise your FIFA 22 experience. As a human being, you need to interact with other players and complete challenges. Playing in an online environment will give you the chance to compete against other humans, or against A.I. players. FIFA is more than just soccer: it's the real life-imitating skill, authentic gameplay and fun that only EA SPORTS can deliver. FIFA features: Console control: Console button mapping allows fans and players of all skill levels to play the game easily and intuitively, by using only their thumbs.
