In this paper, a high-precision strain measurement using the all-fiber end-face interferometry is presented. The measurement is based on utilizing the acousto-optic-modulated fiber Bragg grating (OAMF-FBG) to form a Fabry-Perot cavity. We measured the strain of a microscale surface by measuring the reflected wavelength shift of the all-fiber end-face interferometer under the strain. The strain sensitivity of the end-face interferometer is about 50 pm/mε. The end-face interferometer used in our experiment has wide measurement range from 0 to 100 mε without measurement error. The measurement precision in the experiment is about ± 0.3 mε. The strain measurement stability is ± 0.1 mε. The measurement repeatability of the end-face interferometer is better than ± 0.3 mε in the experiment. The end-face interferometer is valid for strain measurement in the micro and nano scale.Today's post is short but sweet, because I'm really not in the mood to get all flippin' psyched up about Friday's final day of the week, am I right?!! I know I've got a lot of double-digit-years-young relatives, both in this here blog and on Facebook, and a whole swath of you, dear readers, are already sharpening your buzzwords, planning that huge celebration party on Friday. dc0515b9f4
