What is the best way to say that a function can be expressed as $\log(x)$? My thoughts are: The derivative of the function $f(x) = e^x$ equals the function $\log(x)$. Is that correct? A: Something that will be much more correct is to say that the derivative of e^x is $\log(x)$. Another thing that is better than "The derivative of the function $f(x) = e^x$ equals the function $\log(x)$ " is to say that the derivative of $f(x)$ is $\frac{f'(x)}{f(x)} = \frac{d}{dx} e^x = \log(x)$. (This latter thing would be a good thing to say even if it didn't turn out to be true; it's just that the second sentence is more likely to be true than the first.) The First Time You Come In, the Closet is Yours I just came home from the babysitter and I am exhausted. We will be on a 3.5 hour car ride home, we have a 9.5 hour day of school tomorrow, and I will be up late finishing a paper for our class. Normally when we're dropped off, I head straight for my bedroom to put my shoes and purse on the desk. It is the only spot I can put them there and out of sight. I've been getting home late, but this happens more frequently. When the kids are dropped off and I'm heading for the closet to put my shoes and purse on the desk, I hear "Momma! Where's my stuff?" After a while, the kid(s) start heading straight for the closet and the
