Anxiety During Colonoscopy:
A Randomized Trial Using the BTP-TM (Best Technique Procedure). Pain and anxiety (PA) during colonoscopy are considerable causes of discomfort for patients. This randomized study tested whether a specific intervention using the Best Technique Procedure (BTP-TM) for Pain and Anxiety (BTP-PAND) results in lower PA levels and a shorter procedure time. After randomization, patients received standard pain management (control group, $n = 47$) or standard pain management plus the BTP-TM (BTP-TM group, $n = 38$). Time of discomfort, pain scores, and psychologic scores were measured. A per-protocol analysis was performed. BTP-TM was superior to standard pain management regarding the sum of pain scores [mean (95% CI): 47 (38-56) vs 65 (58-73) units; $P = .008$] and sum of discomfort scores [mean (95% CI): 22 (16-28) vs 45 (33-56) units; $P = .001$] in the intervention group. In addition, the interval between first pain score and discontinuation of procedure was 1.3 (0.4-2.1) times shorter in the intervention group ($P = .007$). There were no differences regarding procedure time [37 (35-38) vs 42 (38-46) min; $P = .065$] and pain scores [18 (13-23) vs 20 (15-25) units; $P = .537$].

In the intervention group, 91.6% of patients considered the procedure acceptable; none refused. The BTP-PAND reduced discomfort and perceived PA significantly.

There is no general consensus on this topic, and different fees are used in different places. I thought about this question, because I had this experience at Bitstamp (if you transfer larger amounts you're asked to also pay a fee). A: Bitcoin Core's suggested default fee for mempool (in place when mining) is 4.000 sat/byte. Transaction size (outward)-in sat/byte: 1 = 1 sat/byte * 1 sat/byte Transaction size (outward)-with sender's fee in sat/byte: 2 = 2 sat/byte * 2 sat/byte (fee in sat/byte and total size) Transaction size (outward)-with receiver's fee in sat/byte: 3 = 3 sat/byte * 3 sat/byte (fee in sat/byte and total size) Transaction size (outward)-with sender's and receiver's fees in sat/byte: 4 = 4 sat/byte * 4 sat/byte (fee in sat/byte and total size) Transaction size (outward)-with all fees in sat/byte: 5 = 5 sat/byte * 5 sat/byte (fee in sat/byte and total size) A: Bitcoin Core has a default fee which is 2 sat/byte. The number of sat/byte which you need to pay should be proportional to the transaction size. When you send 0.10 BTC, for example, you need to pay about 0.50 sat/byte. If you can only pay 5 sat/byte, then the best choice for you will be to get in touch with the person to whom you want to send the transaction. But maybe you have a larger transaction that you need to send, in which case you should send the transaction to someone who has a high fee and then ask them to send it back to you. Or maybe, you can only send 1 sat/byte in order to use less bandwidth, in which case you should ask for a smaller fee from the person to whom you are sending the transaction. If you and the person to whom you want to send the transaction have an agreement between you to split the transaction, then you can have the transaction sent to both of you, and each of you will pay the appropriate fee. Earlier today, Verizon put a release out titled "Customer service representative, D-Phone" (for the Droid phones). In this release Verizon takes a page from Apple's book: "Billions of dollars are being spent in current device development and operation, but the customer service representative does not get a performance-based wage increase for the performance they provide. In other words, customers are being short-changed by the companies they entrust to serve them." The company claims that it has hired over 100,000 customer service representatives during 2010, but only 6% of those jobs are performance-based. Instead, customer service representatives are being treated as interchangeable parts in the context of a business operation that requires very little personalized attention from its workers. This is decidedly not a labor-management partnership. Here's the full release (i.e. they say they want labor-management partnerships) Verizon Wireless, a global leader in wireless innovation, continues to expand its online shopping experience.
