This paper investigates the effect of temperature on the biodegradation of single-walled carbon nanotubes (SWCNTs) by free and immobilized nanobacteria in a biofilter. The results show that under simulated hot spring water conditions, the nanobacterial degradation rate of SWCNTs increases with the temperature of the hot spring. However, in the biofilter without nanobacteria, the high temperature caused a decrease in the degradation rate of SWCNTs and a decrease in the degradation efficiency. With the addition of nanobacteria, the degradation efficiency decreased initially. The optimum temperature for biodegradation was found to be 80 degrees C, and the degradation rate was the highest at 80 degrees C. The growth of the free nanobacteria was inhibited under high temperature. Compared with the free nanobacteria, the immobilized nanobacteria had a stronger ability to biodegrade SWCNTs at temperatures of 70 degrees C and 80 degrees C, and their degradation rate and degradation efficiency decreased with an increase in the reaction temperature.Q: Why will the google cloud machine learning (BQ) not work for me? I am attempting to use the google cloud machine learning. I created my projects in BQ as a .JAR file (yes, I am using java). I downloaded the JAR and placed it into my classpath. I also put in my user library folder (under ~/.m2/google/cloud-mlearning) the libraries that it says to put in there
