Coming in at the tail end of the "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" period during World War II, G.I.s marching through the streets of a city in South Carolina probably weren't thinking about sexual politics or sexual identity, but they were definitely thinking about sex. "Sex among military personnel and their dates was a widely accepted practice during the 1940s and 1950s," according to an article in the military newspaper Stars and Stripes. The military in those days certainly had the booming sexual education industry to thank for its reputation for being able to attract and
