The solid lines represent two spatially separated QPs, where the left one has $\Delta z = \epsilon$ while the right one has $\Delta z = 2\epsilon$. The results at $Q = 1$ indicate that there is no size-dependence of the relaxation time at large distances. In the case of two $Q$ QPs, the relaxation time becomes larger as the separation between them is increased and the second $Q$ QP does not experience the enhancement. For example, in the right panel, the relaxation time is $\tau_{\text{relax}} \approx \tau_0$ at small $\epsilon$, which is consistent with the solid line. Also, at $\epsilon = 1$, the relaxation time $\tau_{\text{relax}} \approx 2\tau_0$ for the two separate QPs, and the relaxation time of the cases without the separation is reduced to $\tau_{\text{relax}} \approx \tau_0$. These are in qualitative agreement with the results obtained with OCP in Fig. 3 in [@SM]. In conclusion, we have investigated the temperature dependence of the local electric charge distribution in a dusty plasma and the system's dynamic properties using the single-particle density matrix formalism. We showed that in the presence of charged QPs, the granular charge structure is strongly modified in the temperature range of a few hundred Kelvin, and the grain's size determines the electric charge distribution in a non-t
