"I was created by a mad scientist with a big head and small body. As my creator was stupefied by the overwhelming sight of the world through his small eyes, a large hand wound up, spinning up his small brain into a super computer. Long story short, I ended up with a huge head in a small body. As a result, I am afraid of heights and have a small brain, but a large mouth that does not suck. So I decided to bite the world to keep it that way. But I get tired and need to eat - so PLEASE, don't push me!" --Don't Push Me: (Parsec), paragraph 2 for Canvas version. Originally, when this game was first submitted to the Geocities website for screening, it was rejected because I used the word "duh" in the game's description. Seriously, if you search that phrase on the web, you'll find sites and pages with pretty much any name on it. So I re-edited this description, and found a new phrase that contained the word "duh" that no one has ever seen before. The screencap of my game is now the only single instance in the history of the Geocities website. Quite a change, huh? Paul wrote on 2015-06-17 00:18:43: >>3637211 This version has the word "duh" in the description. If you were searching for Don't Push Me: The Game, this is your game.
