New features: FlipBook Creator for Mac is a new tool and based on the latest technology.Q: Stuck on proof - Theorem 7, Ch 5.8.1 in Ross's Intro to Algebraic Number Theory Here is the problem: I want to prove that the x_i are pairwise relatively prime. I have the basic outline of the proof in my head, but the idea is very foggy. I can't wrap my head around the idea of showing that it is true for all x_i in the set S , then taking the union of those sets. I know that there is a theorem that says if $x_1x_2\cdots x_k = y_1y_2\cdots y_l$ with positive integers x_i and y_j and $k < l$, then x_i and y_j are relatively prime, but I need to prove the result for a single x_i and a single y_j . Could someone explain the basic idea? If I knew what S was, I could build up an intuitive feel for the proof, but the x_i are not given to me. I know it's something like a basic gcd computation between them, but I can't seem to make this geometric intuition work. A: $S = \{a_1, a_2, \dots, a_n\}$ be n distinct positive integers. S has n elements. $A = \{a_1, a_2, \dots, a_n\}$ be a subset of S . First observe
