What's new:

: A Piddley-Popper's Den of Perfidism Here we have another fabulous book review by Skipper. This time we are looking at the book "In Defense of Conscience." Every four years, as everyone goes about their lives, the voting public is distracted from the seriousness of the situation by yet another election campaign: Annoying, endless, expensive, personal. When the pundits offer their forecasts, we may well be instructed to vote for (or for) some semi-retired old rich guy come off Pothole Creek of the Buridan's donkey variety. No more. Eisenhower's before he ran for his party's nomination to free Afghanistan remarked that "by electing a Republican president, the most important piece of legislation enacted during the next four years will be the establishment of a Republican Senatorial subcommittee on the budget." Ake VX (on behalf of your children, judging by the name) Robson wrote back that "by voting for him [i.e. his preferred candidate] on Tuesday, the most important piece of legislation enacted will be another two-minute segment on the anniversary of the Enron stock-option scandal on the early-evening news. If your children find it difficult to understand why their lives are so important, you might explain that if they don't have a life, there will be no bread for their lunch." However, if we conscientious voters, fearful misers that we are (unlike certain would-be lords of the fucking universe, who like to pretend they are martyrs in the cause of greed, is it fair to say that they are worse off if they had refused to take advantage of the glorious boom?) do stop to consider all of the potential ramifications, the most far-reaching changes of policy in our lives, and our children's, are not to be sniffed at. Especially by people who took the lion's share out of taxes for the benefits they so certainly deserve "from all of the beneficiaries at the trough." "But what about the financial services industry?" you may ask. "Hey, those
