Patent Grabber Features: If you have children or grandchildren, chances are you have heard of a blockbuster toy invention called "Fisher Price's Rock-A-Hula Dancing Bird." This clockwork toy was created in 1951, and still retains its popularity nearly half a century later. In fact, one version, the Rock-A-Hula Dance Bird, may even have inspired other toys, including Mattel's Rock-A-Dile and Disney's Tinker Bell and Lightening McQueen. The story of Fisher Price's Rock-A-Hula Dancing Bird is quite interesting, but the fact that the toy was something that was actually invented by children is even more captivating. That's right: this iconic toy is nothing more than the handiwork of some kids! Now, I don't want to suggest that children are as creative and intelligent as they are often made out to be. I'm not one of those ideologues who assumes that children are inherently good and the artist of all life. However, what I would like to point out is that children, especially the young ones, can be creative! So, if you're wondering how children could come up with something as fun and as innovative as the Rock-A-Hula Dancing Bird, there's a simple explanation. They simply didn't want to play with boring toys. They wanted to create their own! That is just one of b7e8fdf5c8
