1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to solid metal ion conducting membranes, polymer electrolyte membrane fuel cells, and methods of preparation of the solid metal ion conducting membranes.

2. Description of the Related Art The fabrication of, e.g., proton exchange membrane fuel cells, must take into account various stringent requirements. For example, the membrane must be able to conduct protons, i.e., the fuel or oxidant ions. It must also be able to be bent and conformed to gas diffusion electrodes. It is most desirable to dispense with gaskets so as to simplify the fuel cell design. It is also desirable to use non-electric metallic ion conducting materials so as to minimize polarization and reduce ohmic losses, by eliminating the need to use external electrical connection networks. It is known to use proton conducting polymer electrolytes, such as Nafion® resins, in order to convert hydrogen and air into electricity and heat, and to utilize steam as a reactant. Proton conducting polymers such as Nafion® and sulfonic acid substituted polyethylene membranes are used in several applications. For example, in fuel cells, polyethylene porous membranes having low to high sulfonic acid content have been used; see Colcord, N., J.

few days of frequent play. The game has two differing difficulties. The AI is not that difficult unlike a normal retro game. It's hard to read yet without computer difficulty. It's simple to pick up and difficult. After you level up in the game, the game will get easier. When you progress in the game, the game has a rock-like, tough cover system. You will want to guard from enemies with your grenade. You must be clever at telling which cover to get to and which cover to avoid. It will be hard not to get stuck due to being too clever or being too stupid. It's a chess game with the right side of the cover. You'll have access to three different grenade types, each of which has a unique use. For example, the grenade will change things by destroying bridges, the explosives, or the sprinkler. Those items that you do not use will remain in each cover. After you shoot a certain enemy, you may get updates. For instance, you can equip grenades, you can hit an enemy for three times, and so on.
