The Friday after Thanksgiving is now known colloquially as “Black Friday,” the commercial shopping extravaganza on the day after the holiday. But when the retailers began selling their wares, that day had a different label. It was “Cyber Monday.” It was the year when countless online shoppers began indulging their taste for everything from computers to watches and a certain collection of 1980s denim. “Cyber Monday” has become an annual online sale, partly driven by the fact that the website companies can lose money if too many of their customers buy on their busiest day, but it is also driven by the mobile-and app-crazed consumer, by which I mean my generation. This holiday season is especially important, since we are heading toward the year in which the next generation of connected millennials comes of age.

And many of my peers, and I, have embraced the smartphone and tablet

Jupiter's icy moon Europa could be hiding a liquid water ocean beneath its icy crust, and today a new NASA mission will test whether there's actually a place to go search for evidence of life. It's just one possible mission among more than a half-dozen that NASA is considering for the Europa Clipper, a proposed mission to ferry a tiny, automated lander to the moon, and then fly it out to Europa, a world covered in ice. NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory hosts a webinar today at 1 p.m. PDT (4 p.m. EDT) to discuss the Europa Clipper, along with two other potential Europa missions: one that would ride on the moon's magnetic field, and another that would use a lander to study the moon's interior.

The Europa Clipper mission is a proposed Europa orbiter, with a proposed small lander that would carry out a variety of studies in and around the moon's icy surface. The mission could launch as early as the mid-2020s. [Probing the Europa Puzzle: 8 Things to Know About the Ice-Covered Moon (Infographic)]

Possible research mission "The Curiosity Rover on steroids," Richard Greenberg (image above) of the University of Washington in Seattle said in an interview with Space.com.

What's known about Europa so far?

The moon is shrouded in ice. The planet Jupiter's gravity is thought to be pulverizing the ice, and sub-surface ocean is thought to be opening up, giving rise to a spray of charged particles and geysers of water vapor and ice. The moon was discovered in 1979 by Voyager 1, which revealed its gravitational field, icy surface and many of the cracks and craters that make the surface of the moon distinctive. The European Space Agency's orbiter, Galileo, studied the moon from 1999 to 2003
