PC service providers are reporting a big increase in sales of desktop computers this year. However, it doesn't appear that the number of people switching from dial-up to broadband is keeping pace with that trend. Those in the local PC sales business say that a lot of new customers are just coming into the industry. Out-of-town sources say the same thing. Despite a big increase in sales of PCs this year, especially out-of-town and former retail PC dealers are reporting a big jump in the number of customers switching from traditional dial-up to broadband. In the past two years, the number of people switching from dial-up to broadband has increased from 8 percent to 15 percent.

"If you back off and think about it, it's like going to a movie theatre and looking at an empty screen," explained Bill Hiltunen, president of World Wide Technologies Inc., a Denver-based PC repair and service company. "The movie theatre is full, and the screen is clear, but if you sit there all night waiting for the movies to begin, you're going to be disappointed." A small and growing number of Washington, D.C.-area customers are starting to realize they can use the Internet to find and buy computers. Hiltunen estimates that about 10 percent of his customers are using broadband to buy computers. The first phase of computer buying begins once potential customers visit his office, which is a throwback to the days when home users bought PCs from retail outlets. 6d1f23a050
