bunniepreziosi.altervista.org After installation, reboot your computer. This method ensures that all of the installed software becomes active at once, not one by one. If you are working on multiple computers, make sure to use a different USB drive on each computer and have each USB drive connected to a different computer. Otherwise, the software installed on the first computer will not be ready to use when the second computer is rebooted. My quick and dirty way of doing this is to just put the installation file in a folder on my desktop and reboot from there. I might have got it wrong but it works for me, it doesn't give me a warning because I'm in a hurry. I use a 32gb USB stick (not fat32) and the installer doesn't create a folder on my USB stick automatically, I create it after installation. NOTE: Follow the steps precisely otherwise you may get Windows update screen error. 1) Unplug the USB device 2) Press Windows + R keys simultaneously 3) Type %appdata% and press Enter 4) Paste the installation file in the folder and hit Enter. 5) After installation restart your computer and see if it works. 6) If it works then you are done. Otherwise, I will guide you through the problem. 1) Boot into a Linux LiveCD 2) Run the installer using sudo command in terminal or open a terminal and type sudo./installer-name 3) Reboot your computer and see if it works There are other methods like sysprep but I will not discuss in this post.
