Long thought to be merely a fable, this mythological nation possesses a thriving economy and a sizable population. It is ruled by a military and is home to many of the most powerful weapons known to mankind. It is North Korea. North Korea has existed for many years, but the public only recently learned of its existence. The myths surrounding North Korea began to get blown out of proportion about six years ago. Just before Christmas 2013, North Korea tested a nuclear weapon, which it only revealed three months later, but people didn't realize this. Three years before Christmas 2012, North Korea captured the attention of the world when it attempted to launch a satellite into orbit. This got a lot of people worried that, at the least, North Korea had developed nuclear weapons, but the world thought that North Korea wasn't capable of destroying the planet. The government released a statement that North Korea was merely testing its technology to launch a satellite into orbit, but this was far from the truth. Pyongyang had been planning this launch for nearly eight years. In 2010, North Korea launched a long-range missile, but it failed shortly after launch. This got people even more worried, as this could mean that North Korea had nuclear weapons. However, the American government was extremely suspicious about North Korea's intentions. This was based on the fact that North Korea had been "damaging US property," as the government labeled the missile launch. In 2012, North Korea launched a satellite into orbit. After a UN resolution was agreed upon, North Korea took over a small island in the Yellow Sea to "test" the missile. In 2012, a US reporter named Evan Ratcliffe discovered that North Korea had been working on building nuclear weapons for years. His discovery was based on documents obtained from the Swiss Embassy and the European Union. Through documents, Evan learned of a long-running diplomatic channel from North Korea to Iran. Through the channel, North Korea
