Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a multipolar cable capable of being used as a ground wire when a buried route is formed, and an electronic equipment room in which a multipolar cable is installed. 2. Description of the Related Art Underground multi-wire cables are buried in the ground for use as ground wires. As the underground multi-wire cable, for example, an IBC (Integrated Building Cable) or GBC (Grounded Building Cable) is used. The IBC or GBC is formed by a single, continuous tape made of a polyethylene-based resin, and has a plurality of wires which are parallel to each other. The single, continuous tape is formed by a profiled, single tape so that its thickness decreases in an axial direction. In addition, the IBC or GBC is capable of being directly connected to a bottom plate (a buried plate) of a house or a structure. When using the IBC or GBC, a multipolar connector is installed on the bottom plate for connection to a power source or the like. When connecting the IBC or GBC to the power source or the like, the IBC or GBC is drawn out of the ground, and then, the multipolar connector is connected to the bottom plate. In this case, a drawn-out portion of the IBC or GBC is generally used as a conduit for the power source or the like. The drawn-out portion of the IBC or GBC is constructed so that it is not damaged due to an impact or a load which is exerted thereon when the IBC or GBC is drawn out of the ground. Thus, the drawn-out portion of the IBC or GBC is formed by a thin, flexible and long tape. In addition, when it is necessary to connect the drawn-out portion of the IBC or GBC to a further conduit, a further drawn-out portion is drawn out of the ground and connected to the further conduit. In this case, a direct connection of the drawn-out portion to the further conduit is not possible. Accordingly, the drawn-out portion of the IBC or GBC is required to be connected to the
