SEATTLE -- A Seattle woman is frustrated after several transactions have been compromised after the new year. She tells Q13 News the credit card companies have rejected her requests to restore her accounts and has had to close her accounts. "It's been an experience," said Nadine Lanier. "So, I thought, 'Hey, after the year change in the new year, I would be more careful with all my credit cards.'" Lanier says she's been using Capital One cards for the last 20 years and has never had an issue. After the new year, she canceled her cards to make sure she wouldn't end up losing everything. She says her next step was to take a trip to Capital One and tell them the situation. Nadine Lanier "I brought over my bank statement of all the things I had charged on my last account on their system," said Lanier. She says she showed them her charges and told them she had two cards and canceled both. Lanier says they looked through the whole thing and told her they were closing her accounts. Lanier says she provided them with all the passwords and they even looked up her last name
